

r/Wattpad findings report

Generated 2026-05-18. End-to-end NLP analysis of r/Wattpad posts and comments over the last 2 years (8 platform-discussion flairs).

Corpus: 1,452 in-scope post threads = 1 post + every comment beneath, parent-chain resolved through Reddit's reply structure. 15,865 comments under 1,133 threads. Excludes 4 structurally-positive flairs (Weekly Promotion, Monthly Discussion, Announcement, Milestone) from sentiment analyses.

1,133 threads have at least one comment · 32 are confident-negative · 477 have a competitor mention in the comments.

Executive summary

1. Pain is concentrated, not diffuse. Two of eight flairs — General Help and Off-Topic — carry essentially all of the community-validated pain (5.7% confident-negative each). The other six flairs are either positive or transactional. See chart 18.
2. Post-only sentiment is misleading. Every flair scores net positive at the post level, even General Help. Post-level VADER averages across multiple aspects within a post and across structurally-positive drive-by posts. ABSA and thread-level signals were needed to surface real pain. See charts 5–7.
3. The loudest pain aspects are identity/inbox, not algorithm. scam (96% neg), email (65%), notification (62%), algorithm (54%), account (46%). The identity & inbox cluster is the loudest quiet pain — none of these aspects make headlines but they're systematically negative. See chart 12.
4. The platform loses, the community on top of it wins. ABSA category breakdown: platform-feature and discovery categories are the most negative; community and service are the most positive. Users love what they bring to the platform, not what the platform brings to them. See chart 15.
5. Switching narratives live in comments, not posts. Comments mention competitors at 2× the rate of posts (1,644 vs. 801). The post asks "should I leave?" — the comments answer "I left for AO3 six months ago, here's how it went." AO3 dominates competitor mentions, then Royal Road, Inkitt, fanfiction.net. See chart 22.

A. Corpus and flair landscape

What's in the corpus and how the eight analytical flairs compare on size, upvotes, and comment volume. Sets the table for everything downstream.

Chart 01 — Flair distribution (in scope, last 2 years)

 Flair distribution (in scope, last 2 years)

Flair distribution (in scope, last 2 years)

What this shows. Bar chart of post counts per flair across the 12 platform-discussion flairs in scope, filtered to the last 24 months. Genre tags, memes, and the Looking For: Lost Books flair are excluded — they don't carry product signal.

What we learned. Looking-For flairs (Feedback, Recommendations, Read-for-Read, R4R) plus General Help and Off-Topic dominate the in-scope corpus. These are the eight analytical flairs we'll activity (story-trade marketplace) split across two flair conventions — worth noting if you compare them.

Chart 02 — Flair distribution (all time)

 Flair distribution (all time)

Flair distribution (all time)

What this shows. Same chart as #01 but without the 2-year filter — every post in the corpus regardless of when it was made. Sanity-check that the 2-year window didn't introduce a structural shift.

What we learned. The ordering and rough proportions match the 2-year view. The 2-year window is not introducing selection bias — the in-scope dataset is representative. Also surfaces a few deprecated flairs with stale historical posts (e.g. Help, Media) that the sub no longer uses, which is why they were dropped from KEEP_FLAIRS on 2026-05-18.

Chart 03 — Median upvotes per flair

 Median upvotes per flair

Median upvotes per flair

What this shows. Median upvote score per post within each flair. Median (not mean) so a single viral post doesn't distort the comparison.

What we learned. General Help and Off-Topic posts carry the highest median upvotes — they generate posts that the community endorses. R4R-style flairs have the lowest medians (transactional, low resonance). Practical implication: the flairs where the community actually votes are also where strategic product signal concentrates.

Chart 04 — Median comments per flair

 Median comments per flair

Median comments per flair

Chart: [analysis/findings/04_flair_median_comments.png]

What this shows. Median comment count per post for each flair.

What we learned. Off-Topic and Read-for-Read top the comment-count chart — they're conversational flairs. Looking-For-Feedback is much quieter (people drop work, fewer reply with

B. Post-level sentiment

Lexicon-based VADER scored on each post (title + body). Treats the post as one signal — useful as a coarse first pass, but conflates multiple aspects per post and systematically under-counts pain. The next two sections are how we got past that.

Chart 05 — Mean sentiment per flair (VADER)

 Mean sentiment per flair (VADER)

Mean sentiment per flair (VADER)

Chart: [analysis/findings/05_sentiment_by_flair.png]

What this shows. Mean VADER compound score per flair, computed on post title + body. VADER range is -1 (very negative) to $+1$ (very positive); standard thresholds are >0.05 positive, <-0.05 negative.

What we learned. Every flair scores net positive at the post level. This is the chart that exposed why post-level sentiment alone is inadequate: it averages across multiple aspects within a post ("I love covers but the algorithm is broken" → near-neutral) and across structurally-positive drive-by posts (Read-for-Read self-promotions). Motivated the move to aspect-level (ABSA) and thread-level (top-3 comments) signals.

Chart 06 — Sentiment distribution per flair (boxplot)

 Sentiment distribution per flair (boxplot)

Sentiment distribution per flair (boxplot)

What this shows. Full distribution of post-level VADER compound scores within each flair. Box = inter-quartile range, line = median, whiskers = 10/90th percentile.

What we learned. The medians are all positive; the lower tails extend into negative territory but only modestly. Even the lower whisker for General Help (the most pain-rich flair) is around -0.4 , not -0.9 . Confirms that post-only VADER systematically under-counts pain because the post-author is still trying to be measured in their framing.

Chart 07 — Sentiment class mix per flair

 Sentiment class mix per flair

Sentiment class mix per flair

What this shows. Stacked bar showing the fraction of posts in each VADER class (positive / neutral / negative) per flair, using the standard ± 0.05 thresholds.

What we learned. Even General Help — which the thread-level analysis later reveals is the most pain-heavy flair — looks ~63% positive at the post level. This is the single most important chart for understanding why post-only sentiment is misleading. It justifies the entire downstream investment in ABSA and thread-level analysis.

Chart 08 — Sentiment weighted by upvote vs. unweighted

 Sentiment weighted by upvote vs. unweighted

Sentiment weighted by upvote vs. unweighted

What this shows. Comparison of mean VADER per flair using post score as a weight vs. equal weight per post. Tests whether the high-engagement posts skew the corpus average.

What we learned. Score-weighting barely shifts the picture. High-upvote posts have roughly the same sentiment distribution as the corpus average. The post-averaging problem cannot be fixed by re-weighting — a structurally different signal layer (aspect-level, thread-level) was the only way forward.

Chart 09 — Sentiment vs. post score (scatter)

 Sentiment vs. post score (scatter)

Sentiment vs. post score (scatter)

Chart: [analysis/findings/09_sentiment_vs_score.png]

What this shows. Every post as one dot, x = VADER compound, y = upvote score. Tests whether sentiment predicts engagement.

What we learned. Effectively no correlation. High-upvote posts span the full sentiment range. Reddit upvotes reward resonance, not positivity. A furious-but-true rant about a real problem accumulates upvotes at the same rate as a heartfelt celebration. This means upvote count is a useful consensus signal but not a sentiment signal — they're independent dimensions.

C. Aspect-level pain — Pass 1 (noun chunks)

First-pass aspect extraction using spaCy noun chunks. Cheap and fast — runs in seconds. Used to short-list 71 aspects worth scoring properly with ABSA.

Chart 10 — Top aspects by frequency (Pass 1, noun chunks)

 Top aspects by frequency (Pass 1, noun chunks)

What this shows. First-pass aspect extraction: spaCy noun-chunk parsing + lemmatization + frequency counting across all in-scope posts. Top 30 aspects shown. No sentiment yet — pure occurrence count.

What we learned. The raw top aspects skew generic — “book”, “story”, “person”, “thing” lead the list. Noun-chunk frequency alone is not enough to surface product-relevant pain. Drove the human curation step that filtered 1,233 raw aspects down to 71 keepers in aspects_curated_keep.csv.

 Top aspects by pain (Pass 1)

Top aspects by pain (Pass 1)

What this shows. Pass 1 aspects re-ranked by a pain score = frequency × negative-context fraction. Negative context is approximated by VADER on a ±5-token window around each aspect mention.

What we learned. First clue that account / email / notification / message form a single identity-pain cluster. Crude method (post-level VADER on a small window misses real opinion structure) but pointed us toward which aspects to re-score with the proper ABSA model in Pass 2. The cheap method earned its keep as a screening pass.

D. Aspect-level pain — Pass 2 (DeBERTa-ABSA)

Pass 2 — DeBERTa-v3-base-absa-v1.1 scored on every (sentence, aspect) pair where the aspect appears in the sentence (or matches a curated synonym). 3,678 ABSA rows × 71 aspects × 1,011 posts. This is where the real aspect-level pain landscape comes from.

Chart 12 — ABSA top pain aspects

 ABSA top pain aspects

What this shows. Aspect-level negative-share ranking from DeBERTa-v3-base-absa-v1.1 fine-tuned on SemEval. Scored at the (sentence, aspect) pair level on every sentence containing the aspect (or a synonym). Pain score = $n \times \text{pct_neg}$. 3,678 ABSA rows $\times$ 71 aspects $\times$ 1,011 posts.

What we learned. The loudest negative aspects: scam (96% neg), email (65% neg), notification (62% neg), algorithm (54% neg), account (46% neg), tag (41% neg), app (38% neg). The identity/inbox cluster (account + email + notification + message) is the loudest quiet pain — none of these aspects make headlines but they're systematically negative wherever discussed. Algorithm is the loudest loud pain — both high-frequency and high-negativity.

Chart 13 — ABSA top praised aspects

 ABSA top praised aspects

ABSA top praised aspects

What this shows. Same model, ranked by praise score = $n \times \text{pct_pos}$.

What we learned. Praise clusters around community and creative aspects: cover , story , character , feedback , beta reader , chapter . The platform itself rarely shows up in top-praise; the community on the platform does. Useful framing for competitor strategy: users love what they bring to the platform, not what the platform brings to them.

Chart 14 — ABSA sentiment mix per aspect (stacked)

 ABSA sentiment mix per aspect (stacked)

ABSA sentiment mix per aspect (stacked)

Chart: [analysis/findings/14_absa_sentiment_mix.png]

What this shows. For the top 20 aspects by frequency, a stacked horizontal bar showing the fraction of positive / neutral / negative ABSA labels.

What we learned. Visualizes the spread: most aspects sit in a 30–60% positive band, but the pain aspects (scam , notification , email , algorithm) stand out as $\geq 50\%$ negative. Single chart that makes pain magnitude comparable across aspects without losing visibility into volume.

Chart 15 — ABSA breakdown by aspect category

 ABSA breakdown by aspect category

ABSA breakdown by aspect category

Chart: [analysis/findings/15_absa_category_breakdown.png]

What this shows. Aggregated sentiment by aspect category, where each of the 71 aspects was hand-labeled in the curation step as one of: `platform_feature` , `discovery` , `monetization` , `community` , `service` , `competitor` , or `generic` .

What we learned. `Platform_feature` and `discovery` are the most negative categories on average; community and service the most positive. The competitive narrative writes itself: the product (platform itself) loses; the social ecosystem built on top of it wins. A competitor platform that solves the platform-side pain while preserving community dynamics has a clear value proposition.

Chart 16 — ABSA vs. Pass 1 noun-chunk pain

 ABSA vs. Pass 1 noun-chunk pain

What this shows. Log-log scatter comparing Pass 1 noun-chunk pain rank against Pass 2 ABSA pain rank, one dot per aspect. Diagonal = perfect agreement between the two methods.

What we learned. Strong overall correlation — the cheap and expensive methods broadly agree on which aspects are painful. ABSA shifts magnitudes, though: a few aspects that Pass 1 ranked high (because they appear in negative-context posts often) drop when scored at the (sentence × aspect) level. Validates ABSA as the more accurate approach without invalidating Pass 1 as a cheap screening tool — future work can use Pass 1 to short-list and ABSA to finalize.

E. Competitor mentions in posts

Regex extraction of 11 tracked competitor platforms from post titles and bodies. Sentence-level VADER on single-mention sentences gives a clean (uncontaminated) read on each platform's sentiment.

Chart 17 — Competitor mentions in posts

 Competitor mentions in posts

Competitor mentions in posts

What this shows. Counts of mentions for 11 tracked platforms in post titles + bodies, ranked by total count, colored by the mean VADER score of sentences where only that platform is named. Detection by regex over canonical names and aliases.

What we learned. AO3 leads (~83 mentions), then Royal Road, fanfiction.net, Inkitt, and Substack.

here at the volume one would expect. Chart 22 shows where they actually live.

F. Thread-level analysis

Treating each post + its comments as one thread unit. This is where the analysis stopped looking at posts in isolation and started measuring conversations — post-vs-comment sentiment agreement, consensus negativity, comment-level competitor talk. The five charts below are the heart of the competitor research findings.

Chart 18 — Confident-negative threads by flair

 Confident-negative threads by flair

Confident-negative threads by flair

Chart: [analysis/findings/18_confident_negative_by_flair.png]

What this shows. Percentage of threads in each flair flagged as confident-negative — meaning post VADER < -0.2 and mean VADER of the top-3 highest-scored comments < -0.1. Two-signal agreement. Filters out lone rants where comments push back.

What we learned. Pain is concentrated, not diffuse. Two of eight flairs carry essentially all of the community-validated pain: General Help (5.7%) and Off-Topic (5.7%). R4R has zero confident-negative threads. This is the chart that tells a product team where to focus reading time. The other six flairs are either positive (Services, Looking-For: Read for Read) or transactional (R4R).

Chart 19 — Post sentiment vs. top-3 comment sentiment scatter

 Post sentiment vs. top-3 comment sentiment scatter

Post sentiment vs. top-3 comment sentiment scatter

What this shows. Every thread (n=1,133 with ≥1 comment) plotted as one dot. X = post VADER, Y = mean VADER of top-3 most-upvoted comments. Diagonal reference shows perfect agreement. Dot size ∝ log(comment count). Four quadrants are annotated.

What we learned. Most threads cluster near the diagonal — post and comments largely agree. Off-diagonal points are the interesting ones: below-diagonal = comments more negative than post (a smoldering issue the OP under-stated); above-diagonal = comments soften the post (rant met with reassurance). The lower-left quadrant (both negative) is the community-validated pain zone that the confident-negative filter selects.

Chart 20 — Sentiment divergence by flair (boxplot)

 Sentiment divergence by flair (boxplot)

Sentiment divergence by flair (boxplot)

Chart: [analysis/findings/20_sentiment_divergence_by_flair.png]

What this shows. Distribution of $(\text{post_vader} - \text{mean_comment_vader})$ per flair. Negative values mean the post was angrier than the comments (isolated rant); positive values mean the post was calmer than the comments (smoldering issue where the community amplifies the OP).

What we learned. General Help has the widest divergence spread — many threads where the OP under-states what the community thinks. These are the highest-value reads for product strategy because the real issue is bigger than the framing suggests. Looking-For flairs (Read-for-Read, R4R) are tightly around zero — transactional posts where everyone is on the same page about the activity.

Chart 21 — Comments per post by flair (boxplot, log scale)

 Comments per post by flair (boxplot, log scale)

Comments per post by flair (boxplot, log scale)

What this shows. Distribution of comment count per thread by flair, on a log x-scale. Box = IQR, whiskers = 10/90th. Only threads with ≥ 1 comment included.

What we learned. Off-Topic and R4R run long conversations (median 10-11 comments); Looking-For: Feedback and Services are broadcasts (median 4). Sets the right baseline for what “engagement” means in each flair section: a 10-comment thread in Services is unusual and worth attention; in Off-Topic it’s ordinary. Without this baseline you’d misread the absolute comment counts in the top-threads section.

Chart 22 — Competitor mentions in comments

 Competitor mentions in comments

Competitor mentions in comments

What this shows. Same form as chart 17 but on comments instead of posts. 11 platforms, ranked by mention count, colored by mean VADER on single-mention comments.

What we learned. Comments mention competitors at 2× the rate of posts (1,644 vs. 801). AO3 dominates by a wide margin; Royal Road, Inkitt, and fanfiction.net follow. Confirms the hypothesis that switching narratives live in replies, not OPs — the post asks “should I leave?” and the comments

G. How threads were selected (methodology for section H)

For each of the 8 analytical flairs, three lists are surfaced. Each answers a different product question.

1. Most-discussed threads (top 10 per flair)

Goal: "Where did the community actually show up?"

Quality score:

$$\text{quality} = \log(1 + n_{\text{comments}}) \times \log(1 + \text{max_comment_score}) \times (|\text{post_vader}| + 0.5)$$

Three factors multiplied:

- $\log(1 + n_{\text{comments}})$ — conversation volume, logged so a 200-comment thread isn't 100× a 2-comment thread.
- $\log(1 + \text{max_comment_score})$ — peak endorsement. One 100-upvote comment beats twenty 5-upvote ones.
- $|\text{post_vader}| + 0.5$ — opinion strength. Calm threads get the floor; opinionated ones rise.

2. Confident-negative threads (top 10 per flair)

Goal: "Where do we have community-validated pain?"

Filter (two signals must agree):

post_vader < -0.2          # OP is clearly negative on title + body
AND
top3_mean_vader < -0.1    # mean VADER of the top-3 highest-scored comments is also n

Filters out lone rants, sarcastic-positive bait, and mild venting. Within the filtered set, threads are sorted by `consensus_neg` (fraction of all comments with VADER < -0.05), then by comment count.

3. Threads with competitor talk (top 8 per flair)

Goal: "Where are users actually naming alternatives?"

Filter: at least one comment mentions one of 11 tracked platforms via regex on canonical names and aliases (case-insensitive): AO3 (incl. `archiveofourown`), Royal Road, Inkitt, Substack, Patreon, Tapas, Webnovel, Radish, Kindle Vella, `fanfiction.net` (incl. `ffn`, `ff.net`), Wattpad (self-references).

Ranked by total competitor-mention count, then comment count.

What each thread shows

- Header line: `post_id` · post ↑ score · n comments · post sentiment · top-3 comment sentiment · % negative comments
 - Flag line (when applicable):  confident-negative,  N competitor mentions,  N switching-language comments
 - Post body: up to 400 characters
 - Top 5 comments by score: each with score, author, sentiment marker ( positive ·  neutral ·  negative), up to 250 characters of body

So i'm a writer for almost 16 years, My writing developed over years until I reached a point that my writing is so good "i'm not trying to compliment myself", But i know my writings is good and poetic. The fandom that i'm in is so small maybe in wattpad we are near 30 users only, and not all of us write... And lately i've been seeing a lot of these users use AI to write?!? I poured my heart and soul into writing a book on wattpad only for it to be a massive flop when I posted it. I can't say it deserved more because it didn't. Even I'm capable of recognizing bad writing but despite that I thought it'd do somehow better. I've reached a point in writing where I know my best isn't going to cut it. Try to read on your phone. Anything works. One-shots that are 2-5 k words work great and take no time at all. Read during lunch, on the way to work, on the elevator. It's a habit. I read even when I'm in the supermarket.

I had a conversation with someone about this when it was just books in reading lists where your followers were notified. You read weird stuff, I read weird stuff. Let's agree not to judge the other on what we're reading. Same with voting.

- ↑ 11 · milejdyvan

I'm sure the writer whose story you're reading would very much appreciate your vote showing to potential readers :) same way you would appreciate your readers liking your story appearing to others. Win/win.

Am I weird for siding with OP's embarrassment? Like if they're uncomfortable with this, then why is everyone pressuring them to see it as "something good". I also hate this new update for the same reason; I'm just a private person.

I am writing a story of werewolf men who will have terror with quite explicit Gore (like visceral descriptions among many other things). Where is the limit in Wattpad so that they won't eliminate it even if it's set as Maturity and for +18?

Top 5 comments:

- ↑ 4 · milejdyvan ●

Violence is fairly fine and isn't an automatic tag for mature. Only you know the level of violence but yes if there's a lot of gore just be safe and make it mature. The only thing that could get you banned is overly detailed imagery of severe violence.

- ↑ 3 · go_to_sleep-yes-you 🚫

Check out the content guidelines. Graphic depictions of violence are permitted if rated mature. <https://preview.redd.it/v4keekgccrv1.jpeg?width=1169&format=pjpg&auto=webp&s=465fbc33aca125f91e8d0a52c2f76ccd22>

- ↑ 2 · Empty_Ad_9455 🟢

The content guidelines are a bit vague, but Wattpad is quite lenient when it comes to violence. As long as it's set within the context of a story, marked as mature and not just violent for the sake of it they tend to allow it.

What makes a good Wattpad story?

Something that's really interesting about Wattpad (and other online writing platforms like RoyalRoad and Inkitt) is how oftentimes a story can have good writing quality but because it's unengaging people don't read it. Or a story can have grammatical errors and cringe stuff, but people love it. So, since traditional metrics of what makes a good story just...don't matter with Wattpad as far as I've...

Half my notifications nowadays consist of shoving these stupid things down my throat. And all of them (at least the ones I get recommended) follow the most unoriginal, overused story of all time. The dark mafia, werewolf, possessive boyfriend plotline. I'm sick of thinking my work is getting engagement, only to be recommended Twilight Remake Number 487. I also just hate the "bad boy" cliché. I am in no way popular. But I was just curious and I googled my username and this is what popped up. Also, The Perfect Score is not my most popular book. It's literally on hiatus. I'm currently (not) writing Twelve Ways to Kill Men. But this was fun.

I'm not gonna name any names or show any covers, but I encountered someone who wrote an entire fic with ChatGBT. I know this because they literally SAID in the description that the whole thing was AI-generated. Being honest about using AI does not make it any less disrespectful.

Top 5 comments:

I'm actually for using AI once a book is read, a bit like you would use an editor to look for spelling, grammar and tense errors. As for them generating a whole book, not sure you can call that writing, so I'm with you on that

As a writer, I often wonder if my content aligns with what readers want or if I am simply presenting my own perspective. I'm uncertain and can't seem to figure it out. Am confused. MAFIAS? COLD HUSBANDS? COLD BOSSES? OFFICE ROMANCE? ENEMIES TO LOVERS? BEST FRIENDS TO LOVERS? FANFICTIONS? INDIAN? SOMETHING ROYAL? SCHOOL LOVE STORY?

Hello Wattpad fam! I have a general question for both readers and authors. I started writing a story on Wattpad about two years ago, and it was actually doing pretty well it's currently sitting at around 14.8K views. The problem is, I haven't uploaded a new chapter in exactly a year. I lost motivation for a while and wasn't sure where I wanted the story to go. Recently though, I figured things out...

I would absolutely go back and read it and maybe even start from the beginning again. Somebody recently updated a story that they started in 2013 and now finished, and I loved that and reread the whole thing.

This seems completely reasonable. Even popular tv series take a long hiatus mid season

I'm writing a book in Wattpad, so how many chapters should I have? I have seen authors do like 70+ chapters for a single book. Is it necessary? I mean, if I think it is. So I would like your opinion please.

Top 5 comments:

- ↑ 9 · JMComics1412

Write as many as you need. If the chapter is essential to the story then add it. If you plan to make physical copies in the future, divide the story up into multiple books/volumes. Don't limit yourself to a chapter number.

- ↑ 4 · RaspberryCanoeing

I think the real question is: how long is the story you are trying to tell? There are novellas that have 7 chapters that are amazing.

- ↑ 2 · RaspberryCanoeing

I think it depends on the story you are telling. Serial dramas can be hundreds of chapters. A normal novel length can be anywhere from 10-50.

- ↑ 2 · maarshiexcry

As many as you want. You can make a short story, you can make a 200chapter story. You can write as much as you want, there is no 'bare minimum' nor upper limit.

You are right. Even I am also writing a book of 10 chapters.

How often should I post new chapters?

Hello everyone! I've been a writer for a while, and I've been looking for ways to publish my book. I heard that Wattpad was a good platform for that, and I got quite excited. But... I don't know where to start 😊. I heard I need to create a target audience to be able to read my book, or publish it on Wattpad. Can someone give me some advice? Some strategies? I'm interested in finding the best opening chapters, but find Wattpad is 95% strange romance/smut, and I want to find the other 5%. I'm looking for any kind of writing; fantasy, horror, scifi, thriller, romance, that are focused on good writing above all else. Please recommend your own novel if you like. Ps, no hate to smut, but not what I'm looking for.

I'm writing a fantasy novel and I've decided to challenge myself by trying to implement and subvert as many cringey romance/anime tropes as I can. I've already got a yaoi where one of the two isn't gay and a harem from the perspective of the woman the guys trying to seduce.

Hate love triangle. Miscommunication is strenuous... like, just talk. These two are the worst (for me personally)

- ↑ 6 · Empty_Ad_9455 🔴

I'm not a fan of romance in general, but something that really can get on my nerves is the main cheating, especially if the cheater goes on to act like the victim.

- ↑ 5 · milejdyvan 🟢

The two romance leads are the center of the universe and literally everyone is way too invested in their relationship.

- ↑ 4 · StrikingAd3606 🔴

"I cheated but had a 'valid reason' so watch me redeem myself"

One of the worst. I can feel for or build sympathy for that type of character.

I'm a millennial writer, born in the last century (yeah, I'm that old), which probably explains why my stories don't follow the usual hype: Love triangles; Bad-boy CEOs; Dark bad boy redemption arcs; Magical girls riding dragons across magical worlds; Mafia princes who "protect" fragile virgins by breaking someone's hands. I'm looking for F4F with more mature writers, people creating stories where...

I wanted to talk about something that's been bothering me a little and honestly ask if my expectations are unreasonable. I've done a few read-for-read exchanges before, and I always try to approach them genuinely. When I read someone's story, I actually read it. I leave reactions, thoughts, and comments as I go because that's just how I engage with stories. If something excites me, I comment. If I...

Exactly, back when I was on the platform in 2023 and 2024 phase, the R4Rs were so good. Like, seriously, they had built like a group of 20 friends and we were actively following like following everyone's stories, reading through them. And it had shap...

I totally know what you mean! It is frustrating at times. When someone wants to do a R4R, I do check out the story before I agree and see if it's a story I would actually be into reading and interacting with.

I know all for hours are transactional, but you do have to read it, right? Not leave a bland comment that this looks nice and just vote on all the chapters. Why would you do that? Back in the days, read for reads were reading through at least, like w...

Hihi, I am not super free, so if you may pitch your stories to me, I can pick which I find the most interest to read I will be very genuine, though. I won't read through the entire story if it isn't interesting, but I will get through at least three or four chapters before judging. I'll vote for stories genuinely good AND share them with my reading buddies If you find my story boring, feel free to...

I don't have time for a read-exchange, but we're all emerging writers on Wattpad, and I'd like us to help each other out. Leave me the link to your story, and I'll follow you and vote for your chapters—as long as you do the same for mine. LET'S ALL HELP EACH OTHER OUT. This is an open letter to the web devs (and I don't know why we don't have this feature yet). If you're like me and lived through the golden age of Wattpad (2012—yes, OG as hell), you'll remember the days of just writing straight on the platform with zero backups. But times have changed. With more stories being removed for unclear reasons, I really think Wattpad should let us export our books as

It should go both directions then: both uploading and downloading stories.

Agreed! 100

There are external places to download Wattpad stories (not official), but I've used it as a way to download my own books and have copies

Hahaha you can go on ahead tell that to my 13 yr old self. I'm an adult now and know better tho, so don't worry. I'm just raising awareness and flagging something as simple as this function since it should be implemented in wattpad by now care of the...

That would be such a time saver. I've gotten more efficient with practice but it still took like an hour+ to get the 33 chapters + Authors Foreword and such pasted from my doc into Wattpad for a new piece yesterday. Not fun.

Whole account vanished with no explanation

I uploaded 2 chapters of a story, day before yesterday on my new account. This is my first account and first story. Yesterday, when I was looking through the stats, they weren't available as only 23 hours had passed, but the rankings for the tags was available. It looked pretty cool like #21 out of 11,000, etc throughout the tag list. Although the story had only nine views and two votes yet. I too...

This is tough to bring up, but I'm concerned that your work might have been reported. Unfortunately, I've seen similar things happen to other authors.

- ↑ 8 · Lovefromdel_- 🔴

ngl after I read your post I scrolled a bit more and 16h ago(at that time) somebody else complained about this too... So, it seems like this might be a broader issue. Other users have reported similar problems, possibly indicating a glitch.

I've been through something similar. I lost my first account and created a new one with a different email, but that one was deleted, too.

Account closed, just like mine 8 days ago. They are really sensitive on the grounds. Opening a ticket will only end with a general copy+pasted response that you violated one of their policies, with no chance to defend. It will still keep you guessing...

Thanks :(I started writing recently after a long pause and thought to give Wattpad a go. Seems like a terrible platform now.

Drop your usernames, I'm following everyone who does!

Hi Wattpad!! I had posted this a few weeks ago but I have had a really busy few weeks, I havent necessarily got to following those who put down their usernames before so I wanted to post this again. I wanted to offer that follow once again now that my week is starting off a little smoother and slower, so for those who would like for me to follow them, put down your usernames and ill get to followi...

I'm a journalist grad + current creative writing student, and I've found it helpful for myself as a writer and as a reader to try to give as much thoughtful feedback as I hope to receive. So! anyone who wants feedback on their work (maybe not an entire finished work or series), I'd love to give some thoughtful, constructive feedback to anyone interested. Send me a chapter or something! Note: it do...

Hey everyone, I will read 3 chapters of your book and give me full feedback. Comment your links in the comments down below and I will get right to it!. Note: Please don't be discouraged if I don't get to your book right away I already have a few R4R I need to do so it might take me some time but I will get to it eventually. All I ask for in return is that you vote on the chapters of my book, I wil...
